WAR SUMMARY OF THE LATEST EVENTS

The news from the Dardanelles is of great importance. The British army on the Gallipoli Peninsula has not only gained an advance of 1000 yards in the face of the most stubborn opposition, but it has secured a position from which a further advance will be made with still greater prospects of success. The shores of the southern portion of the Peninsula are rocky and in most places precipitous. Only two points could be found with beach enough to enable the allied troops to land in force—Sedd-el-Bahr, at the extreme south, and Baba Tepe, some twelve miles up the west coast. The principal landing took place at Sedd-el-Bahr, and the advance has been pushed from the south over hills and ravines towards Achi Baba, or Tree Peak, the dominating ridge of the region and the Centre of the Turkish defensive position. The French, who hold the portion of the allied lines nearest the Straits, have had extremely hard ground to traverse, but have recently gained a position which enables them to begin direct operations from the southeast against Tree Peak. It is reported that in the trenches taken along the ravine up which they are advancing the bodies of 6,000 Turks were found.

On the west front of the lines the British occupy trenches running from the Gulf of Saros over rather precipitous country to a valley almost in the centre of the Peninsula, in which lies the village of Krithia, with the highest point of the Tree Peak ridge about two miles due east. By forcing their way up the Saghir Valley past Krithia the British troops will outflank the Turkish defences on Tree Peak, which are so strong that a direct assault upon them would cost very many lives. The advance of Monday was intended to secure the Turkish trenches stretching across the ravine south of Krithia and occupying the rising ground to the east and west. It was more successful than Sir Ian Hamilton expected, for not only did the troops engaged advance to the north over a thousand yards up the Saghir Valley, but the Gurkhas on the extreme left, after the British regulars had captured five lines of Turkish trenches, in which were found many dead, made a dash still farther north and captured an isolated hill rising out of the valley due west of Krithia. This hill dominates the surrounding territory. It was held and fortified and its possession will make the retention of Krithia by the Turks impossible and open the way for a further advance northward up the Saghir Valley.

On the eastern side of the valley the advance was not so successful. The Royal Scots, who led it, captured two lines of trenches, but the remainder of the brigade on the right was unable to go forward because of the severe

THE LATE DENIS DALY

The funeral took place on Sunday last of Denis Henry Aldworth, one of Napanee's oldest and most tinctive citizens. He was the youngest of a family of ten, the oldest of family being his sister, Eliza, late Mrs. Neil McIntyre, of Bangor. He was named after his father, I. Daly, and his mother, Maria Aldworth. His father, Denis Daly, had been a cotton manufacturer in Dublin, land, but with the introduction of machinery, which superseded the hand looms, the business, in common with other similar firms in Ireland, with a single exception, became bankrupt, and in 1840 he came out to country with a part of his family including Eliza, Edward, George Denis, all familiar figures through part of Ontario. They settled in Kingston. Some years after the family rented a farm on the High Street of the Bay of Quinte. The market their produce was in Kingston, for a number of years the late Denis Daly was a familiar figure on the Kingston market. They took to with them dry goods, groceries, teas which they sold in the surrounding country, but finally they specialized in teas to the exclusion of other commodities. The family then moved to the Deseronto Road where they purchased a farm, and a later Denis and George bought another farm in the neighborhood, and branched out in the tea business themselves. These two branches finally resulted in the business of Edward Daly, centered in London and of Denis Daly around Napanee.

Finally some years after the death of George Daly, which occurred in 1876, the farm was given up and Denis Daly moved into Napanee, and the family of the late George Denis and they made their home at Riverview, the Rogers residence on Park Hill. In 1883 the late Mr. Daly married Mary Frances Bennett, daughter of the late William Lewis Bennett of Mary Smale Bennett.

Two of their children died, He Aldworth in 1906, and Donald Aldworth in 1908. Mr. Daly is survived by Mrs. Daly and three children: Richard Arthur, Roland Oliver, Kathleen Frances.

British regulars had captured five lines of Turkish trenches, in which were found many dead, made a dash still farther north and captured an isolated hill rising out of the valley due west of Krithia. This hill dominates the surrounding territory. It was held and fortified and its possession will make the retention of Krithia by the Turks impossible and open the way for a further advance northward up the Saghir Valley.

On the eastern side of the valley the advance was not so successful. The Royal Scots, who led it, captured two lines of trenches, but the remainder of the brigade on the right was unable to go forward because of the severe opposition of the Turks, who must have brought many guns to bear upon the British attacking force from positions on the west side of Tree Peak. The ground gained on the right is valuable because it supports and buttresses the larger gains on the west side of the valley. The Turks on Tuesday made a vigorous counter-attack, but, according to a French official statement, it was crushed, the enemy suffering considerable losses. Their defeat will greatly depress the Turks, who see the allied strength increasing continually while theirs declines, especially in artillery, which is vital to the defence.

The Germans are making another serious attempt to isolate Verdun and bring it within range of their siege artillery. The French night report says there was a bombardment yesterday of the front north of Verdun, while to the west, in the Argonne Forest, after an uninterrupted bombardment lasting three days, the Germans attacked the French positions around Binerville and Bagatelle. They were twice repulsed, but at the third attempt gained a foothold in certain portions of the French lines in the direction of Bagatelle. When the last serious attempt was made on Verdun the Germans tried hard to drive the French out of the wooded region they hold west and northwest of the fortress and so isolate it from relief. The French at present hold lines sweeping around Verdun well to the north, and until they are driven back an attack on the fortress is not to be thought of. Hard fighting along the west bank of the Muse must precede any attempt to capture Verdun.

Austrian and Russian official reports agree that Von Linsingen's army operating on the Gnila Lipa and on the west bank of the Bug in Galicia has met with a distinct check. The Vienna night report says that Von Linsingen has been "delayed" by the Russians. The Petrograd report is more specific. It states that, despite the reinforcements of Von Linsingen's army with fresh German troops its attempt to throw the retiring Russians into confusion has failed, the Germanic army suffering "enormous losses." The Russians are withdrawing, but they refuse to be hurried.

Better success attends Von Mackensen's drive into southern Poland between the Vistula and the Bug. The army directly under command of the Austrian Archduke Joseph is pushing forward, and Petrograd admits it is in great force. Only rearward actions are being fought by the Russians, and the Germans have occupied Zamsse, twenty miles within the Polish border. There is no indication that the Russians have reached the point at which they purpose to make a stand. The Germanic adventure into southeastern Poland is a daring one. The troops have a fifty-mile march to make before they reach a railway at Lublin, and even then they will be a good distance south of Ivanogor, their first principal objective, and over eighty miles from Warsaw.

The Italian official report once again states that storms and fogs are delay-

So far as Berlin newspapers cuss the Socialist manifesto, de-

TRIED TO SURRENDER.

Dalmatian Sailors Endeavored to Give Austrian Ship to Italians.

GENEVA, June 29.—Details of the Austrian naval mutiny in Admiral Spahi's squadron at Pola reached here yesterday.

The crew of one of the battleships, mostly Dalmatians, overpowered the officers and locked them in their cabins. They intended seceding out during the night to deliver the battleship over to the Italians.

The plot was discovered and the remainder of the fleet opened fire. The mutineers replied with all their guns for an hour, and then hoisted the white flag and surrendered.

It is reported that the mutineers seriously damaged the Dreadnought Radezky. It is probable that all of them will be shot.

Fourth Soldier Drowned.

MONTREAL, June 29.—The drowning of a fourth soldier on duty on the Lachine Canal picket at 3 o'clock yesterday morning has aroused the military and civil authorities to immediate action. The victim this time was Pte. F. J. Rodney, twenty-one years old, 180 Laporte avenue. He was a member of the Irish-Canadian Rangers.

The first two drownings were considered purely accidental, but when the third case occurred the military authorities commenced a careful investigation, and this will be carried even further now that the fourth drowning has taken place.

Treated with every consideration by the German medical staff nursing sisters, they passed Belgium through Essen, and once were handed into the care of the Dutch, whose Red Cross authorities showered on them every conceivable kindness. APPEAL CONDEMNED.

nan Papers Repudiate Socialist Plea For Peace.

LONDON, June 29.—For publication the Socialist appeal for peace Vorwaerts has been suspended, according to a Reuter despatch from Rotterdam, received Saturday night. Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of Berlin, in chronicling the omission of The Vorwaerts, comments on the Socialist pronouncement as follows: "The manifesto is greatly to be regretted because it will create a very undesirable impression abroad. The manifesto may be interpreted as war weariness on the part of Germany, which does not exclude military events and the political situation offer prospects of a successful peace. The German Government on its own accord will do what is necessary. Until then there is only watchword for Germany—'Hold on!'"

As far as Berlin newspapers disavow the Socialist manifesto, declaring for peace under certain conditions, they are unanimous in concurring. The Vossische Zeitung pronounces it incomprehensible and devoid of logic. It asserts that even Socialist press admits the impossibility of leaving wholly unchanged territorial status of the countries involved.

The Kreuz Zeitung thinks it would constitute a grave danger to a counterlighting for its very existence to let the manifesto to stand unrefuted. The statement that the ruling classes are opposed to the peace proposal is denied. The paper asserts that the suggestion Germany make peace overtures to ask Germany to assume the role of a conquered country and that demand tends to weaken Germany by creating the impression abroad that a considerable part of the people are tired of war, which is the Tages Zeitung regards the publication of the manifesto as regrettable and asserts that it should have been addressed to the Governments of countries fighting Germany.

PRISONERS STARVING

Prisoned Men Say Most British Depend on Food From Home.

ROSENDAAL, June 29.—Yesterday afternoon 550 incapacitated British soldiers and men of the Royal Medical Corps crossed the border into Holland on their way to England. A greater portion of the party, namely, thirty-four doctors and 301 men, were of the medical service, the remaining two hundred being men maimed in the war and incapable of further military service. The party has been waiting at Brussels whilst final arrangements were made for the transport of an equal number of wounded British soldiers from England. They left yesterday morning by special trains for England, whence they travel to the Orange Nassau for England.

Accompanied with every consideration by German medical staff and English sisters, they passed from Rotterdam through Essen, and at last were handed into the care of the Dutch, whose Red Cross authorities looked after them with considerable kindness. The Germans and English had themselves decorated the station as much in tribute to the British as in preparation for the welcome to the Germans expected in England. At Rosendaal the British were overwhelmed by attention.

ITALIANS NEARING RIVA

They Are Now Only Six Miles From Town on Lake Garda.

Positions in the Carnic Alps Have Been Strengthened by the Occupation of Zellonkofel Peak—Fifteen-Day Battle Is Raging Along the Isonzo—Bombardment of Malborghet Still Continues.

LONDON, June 29.—Through passes 5,000 feet in altitude the Italians have entered the Austrian territory south of Riva on the western side of Lake Garda. They are now within six miles of Riva, which is the only important town on this lake.

A despatch from Udine says: "The bombardment of Malborghet continues." This laconic phrase has been repeated daily since the bombardment of the Austrian positions just west of Tarvis began on June 12. To understand its meaning one must realize that the struggle is occurring in the very heart of precipitous mountains, which rise between the Italians and Austrians like a titanic wall.

Alpine soldiers have still further strengthened their positions in the Carnic Alps by the occupation of Zellonkofel Peak, a mountain 2,500 feet high, west of Freikofel and Monte Croce Pass. Zellonkofel forms a part of the Kellerspitzen tableland, from which the march down upon Plocken can be achieved in a couple of hours.

The enemy is continually growing in number, and never lets the night pass without a strenuous attempt to recapture Freikofel, but with all his brave perseverance he has quite failed to gain any permanent footing in the face of the withering fire of the Italian batteries. Along the Isonzo River the battle which began fifteen days ago is still raging. Italian covering troops are in close contact with the Austrians, who have retreated under the protection of their fortresses at Tarvis, Tolmino and Gorizia.

For several days the enemy has succeeded in playing terrible havoc with various villages, many of the inhabitants of which were killed or maimed by exploding shells from 2 cleverly concealed battery of 12-inch guns. When the Italian artillerymen eventually discovered their whereabouts, by the aid of air scouts, the Austrians, in mortal fear lest the cannon should be smashed or overturned, sought to trick their adversaries by hoisting a huge white banner bearing a red cross on the roof of a private villa just behind the battery.

CONSPIRATOR CONFESSES.

Watchman Says He Plotted to Dynamite Windsor Buildings.

WINDSOR, June 29.—After the police had grilled him for hours without result, Wm. Lefler of 589 Warren avenue, Detroit, watchman at the Tate Electric plant, has made a confession to Crown Attorney J. R. Rodd that he, with two other Detroit men, had conspired to blow up Windsor factories and public buildings.

Lefler broke down completely when he was leaving for Sandwich all Saturday afternoon.

"I could not hold out any longer," he sobbed, as he stepped into the automobile.

RETREAT IS COMPLETED

Russians Have Fallen Back Across the Dniester.

Five days Rearguard Action by Grand Duke Nicholas' Troops Has Been Merely a Covering Movement to Permit Main Retreat—Germans Have Launched Another Attack Against Warsaw.

LONDON, June 29.—Berlin reports the fall of the Galician town of Halicz, and says that the Austro-Germans have crossed the Dniester River, which means that the five days' desperate rearguard action by the Russians has ended in their retirement. However, the stubborn resistance of this flank of the forces of Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, has undoubtedly enabled him to reform his lines along the River Bug virtually without interference. It is now apparent that the Dniester forces were merely covering for the northern army.

In north Poland the Germans have launched another attack against Warsaw in the form of a drive from the north through Przasnysz.

The new blow at the Polish capital has been preceded by a terrific artillery action. The fact is recorded by the Russians themselves, but it is too early to say whether it means a serious offensive, the first clash having developed a bayonet encounter, the result of which neither side records.

Neither Berlin nor Vienna makes reference to the conflict in this region, confining their statements to the Galician situation, where victories are claimed in various sectors, from the Bessarabian frontier to Rawa Ruska, north of Lemberg.

What is more important, the Germans claim that the Teutonic forces have crossed the Dniester, northwest of Halicz and have driven the Russians some miles into the hills.

The present consensus of opinion among military writers in London is that Germany intends further to press her eastern victories with another battering-ram stroke toward Warsaw in an endeavor to seize that city and the whole line of the Vistula.

The line of offensive now directed from the Przasnysz region is along the valleys of the Omulew and Orzyc, tributaries of the River Narew, which flows across North Poland and joins the bend of the Vistula above Warsaw.

Petrograd reports a number of victories at various points, but does not bring the record up beyond Friday.

Petrograd official despatches claim an important success for the Russian force operating in the Dniester region northwest and east of Halicz, the enemy suffering many losses. The fight still rages. Rushing up reinforcements at the critical moment the Russians drove the enemy into confusion across the river. The German official report admits this reverse, but the Austrian report conflicts with that of Berlin.

Though meeting with the hardest resistance on the Dniester, the initiative in the east still rests with the Austro-Germans. Few military writers care to hazard a guess of what their next move will be. It is argued by them that the situation in the west may at any moment become pressing, and that Germany and Austria may be forced to be content with having recovered Galicia and

FLOATING HOMES.
Barge Dwellers of New York One of the Sights of the Harbor.
The lot of the harbor bargeman is not one for commiseration. He is far more independent and content than his neighbors in the fetid bives of the tenement districts which he sees from his barge as he floats past the river

At evening his floating home is moored in a quiet dock. He may sit pledged to fight for hours without result, Wm. Lefler of 589 Warren avenue, Detroit, watchman at the Tate Electric plant, has made a confession to Crown Attorney J. R. Rodd that he, with two other De- troit men, had conspired to blow up Windsor factories and public build- ings.

Lefler broke down completely when he was leaving for Sandwich all Saturday afternoon.

"I could not hold out any longer," he sobbed, as he stepped into the automobile.

Besides Lefler, two other men were engaged in the plot, which contemplated not only the entire destruction of the Windsor Armouries, but of the Canadian Bridge Com- pany's plant in Walkerville, the Pea- body Company, the Dominion Stamp- ing Company at Ford, the Tate fac- tory, as well as several other large manufacturing plants.

Lefler declares he was selected as the man who was to plant the bomb at the Tate factory, but his heart failed him and he did not finish the job.

Albert Kaltschmidt, who for four years was manager of the Tate plant, together with a man named Schmidt, both residents of Detroit, are named by Lefler in his confes- sion.

The confession made to Crown Attorney Rodd Saturday afternoon was brought about after Lefler's wife had come over from Detroit and seen him in his cell at police head- quarters.

KILLED AT KERR LAKE.

Scott Eldridge and W. B. Foote, Both Americans, Caught by Blast.

COBALT, June 29. — Scott Eld- ridge, mining engineer, of Philadel- phia, and W. B. Foote, a wealthy mining investor of Geneva City, New York, were instantly killed by a blast at Kerr Lake mine, about 4 o'clock Friday afternoon.

Eldridge was taking Foote down the Kerr Lake mine, and they were in the slope at the 140-foot level when the blast went off at the regu- lar time at the 250-foot level, and coming up the slopes killed both men instantly.

Foote, who was about 45 years of age, had been in this camp for two or three days, looking over prop- erties in which he has large invest- ments. He was unmarried, but leaves his mother, about 87 years old, living at 24 Snerrill street, Geneva City, N.Y.

Eldridge was mining engineer of Kerr Lake mine. He was unmarried, about 25 years of age. His relatives live in Philadelphia. He was well known in this camp and well liked.

ATTACKS SLACKEN.

Germans Have Been Taking a Rest Along the Western Front.

PARIS, June 29.—The enemy has made no further attacks during the past 24 hours on the western front, although artillery duels are in progress at many points.

Fiercy liquid and poisonous fumes were used by the Germans in at- tempting to recapture their trenches which the French had captured at the Calonne field works on the Meuse heights Saturday afternoon and night and Sunday morning, but after the enemy reached his former first line in the last onset he was re- pulsive, suffering heavy losses, and the French retained all the territory they had previously won, that is, all the former German first line and portions of the second line.

The French also recaptured yester- day a section of a trench on a front of 125 yards that the Germans had occupied Saturday evening ex- cept a small section of about 30 yards. Around this section the ridge south of the ravine of Souvaude, to the north of Flirey, and on the front of La Haye a heavy artillery action was continued all morning.

HUERTA IN THE TOILS.

U. S. Officials Frustrated Attempt to Start a Revolution.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The United States Government has frus- trated for the present an attempt on the part of Gen. Victoriano Huerta and his associates to launch from American territory a new revolution- ary movement in Mexico.

Detention of the former Mexican dictator, with Gen. Orozco and others, at El Paso yesterday followed nearly three months of espionage by Government agents. The Depart- ment of Justice had instructed United States Attorney Camp, of the western district of Texas, to take into custody these men, who, seem- ingly, were engaged in violation of American neutrality laws, which for- bid the recruiting of men, the pur- chase of supplies therefore and the organizing of a military expedition on the soil of the United States to be used in operations against a peo- ple with which this country is at peace.

Muslin curtains at its tiny windows, geraniums on the sills, a cheery nickel clock on its own shelf above the stove, a neat red table- cloth, a homemade braided rug upon a bright oilcloth—these give character to the living room, or galley. Within is the bedroom, perhaps 6 by 8 feet, with a white iron bed and a bunk above its foot, in which the son and heir sleeps peacefully.

There may be a cottage in New Jer- sey or down Long Island sound wait- ing this worthy couple when winter's ice closes the Hudson and ends their season's work, but they make the barge their home while on it.

Some of these barge homes shelter families of five or six persons. On some of the large covered railroad barges the skipper's house is on the roof. Its dimensions may be 10 by 30 feet, affording three rooms. In the "parlor" one would not be surprised to find a sofa, a music machine and racks of records and family portraits in crayon, all according to usage ashore, while the captain, being of a sporting turn, takes his family to sail on a Sunday in a gorgeously painted punt of his own building with lee- boards to make it weatherly and a sail setting as neatly as the canvas of a cup defender.—Harper's Magazine.

IT WAS A "JIM" POEM.

But That Was Not the Only Reason Why Riley Liked It.

James Whitcomb Riley and Joel Chandler Harris figure in a story told by a writer in the New York Sun. They had sought rest and recuperation in a hotel among the southern moun- tains and wished to avoid the attempts of the other guests to floutize them. Much against their wills, however, they were constrained to appear at a "reading" from their own works, after having been routed from a secluded spot in the woods to which they had retired.

A young elocutionist had the center of the stage when they got to the hotel. She led off by announcing a poem by Mr. Riley. She recited it. It was about somebody named Jim. Riley looked impressed.

"Would you mind," he said when she had finished, "reciting that again?"

She did not mind, and went at it. Riley wiped a tear away as she finish- ed. Then he said, "Please recite it again, if you will."

She did it the third time, and Riley was even more affected.

"Do you know," he said, after she had ended, "I like that poem. It's a Jim poem. I always liked Jim poems. My own name is Jim. I always read Jim poems. I have written several Jim poems myself. But do you know why I like this Jim poem better than any other?"

The young woman eagerly asked why. The assembled guests leaned forward breathlessly to hear the an- swer.

"Like it," said Riley, "because it al- ways reminds me of my dear old friend, Eugene Field. Eugene Field is the man who wrote that poem, you know!"

OTTAWA POLITICS.

Finance Minister White's explanation that Canada doesn't get as many war contracts from the British Government as she might because exchange is against us in New York is the subject of a great deal of amusing comment at the capital. It is about as reasonable as saying that the law of gravitation doesn't work because Bob Rogers is going to run in Carleton County or that the moon has ceased to influence the tides because Premier Borden gets his feet wet when he waters the garden. Finance Minister White's explanation does not explain why Canadian manufacturers with a pull get contracts which they have no plants to fill while Canadian manufacturers with plants which could fill the contracts in a hurry have no pull with the Purchasing Commission. However, it does partly explain the Purchasing Committee, stationed in New York, which has the sanction of the Canadian Minister of Militia and does a line of business calculated to make even Bob Rogers jealous.

This Purchasing Committee, which has been on the job ever since the war started, consists as far as can be learned, of two colonel—one real or Tipperary colonel and one honorary—and an honorary major. The honorary officers are both of Major-General Hughes' appointment and one of them, the colonel, is chairman of the committee. His name is John Wesley Allison is an expatriated patriot, an old pupil of the Major-General, who was once a schoolmaster, one of the perfect flowers of his teaching and influence and therefore to be trusted with large sums of money. Of course all the Major-General's old pupils are not built that way, for example Honorary Major McQuarrie's foot slipped—but a fair percentage of them are level headed men and can be relied on not to make bad breaks. In times of peace Colonel Allison is secretary of a New York sleeping car company but in times of war he wakes up and is at least twenty-five per cent more active.

The other colonel on the committee is named Morgan. He is the genuine article, imported from the old country and his name is one which suggests stirring adventure on the high seas. Honorary Major Thomas, the other member of the Committee, is also a find of Major-General Sam's. He is a transportation expert and he sprang into fame by going over the same ground as Honorary Major Thomas Russell, another of Major-General Sam's proteges, and saving half the money Major Russell had found it necessary to spend in the first wild scramble for armored cars, motor trucks and things like that.

This New York Purchasing Committee was formed with the definite object of protecting the British War Office which is supposed to chafe if it comes into direct contact with the manufacturers. To prevent this it is necessary to throw up a screen of middlemen. Which, as the Major-General would say, was done accordingly. From that day to this the New York Purchasing Committee has never faltered in its heroic work for Canada and the British Empire.

During the last session of Parliament its operations came under scrutiny from Dr. Pugsley who asked if it was true that the first order of seventy-five million rounds of Mark Seven Point 303 small arms ammunition—the standard rifle shell for all the belligerents—was purchased from the American manufacturers at twenty-five dollars per thousand rounds and turned in to the British Government at thirty-two dollars per thousand. To which Major-General stated, the correspondence is confidential. So far as producing the documents in the Canadian Parliament—the Major-General told Dr. Pugsley—he couldn't if he would and he wouldn't if he could. And there the matter stands. However the British Government is waking up and is sending a special commissioner, D. R. Thomas, over to ask what about it. The fault seems to be that the New York Purchasing Committee is doing its work too well—it is a perfect hog for contracts. The story runs that the recent Russian reverses in Galicia are due to a contract with the committee, the American factories being glutted and not able to turn out the ammunition on time. Among other things Mr. Thomas will inquire why Canadian factories are starved for orders while American factories have more than they can do. It is not likely that Finance Minister White's exclamation will be accepted as covering the whole case.

never altered in its heroic work for Canada and the British Empire.

During the last session of Parliament its operations came under scrutiny from Dr. Pugsley who asked if it was true that the first order of seventy-five million rounds of Mark Seven Point 303 small arms ammunition—the standard rifle shell for all the belligerents—was purchased from the American manufacturers at twenty-five dollars per thousand rounds and turned in to the British Government at thirty-two dollars per thousand. To which Major-General Hughes replied that thirty-two dollars was a reasonable price and that the British Government had paid more since. Perhaps they did but nobody will think any more of the British Government for that. A profit of $450,000 on one transaction of two millions and a half twenty-five per cent is fairly stiff.

When the Major-General hastened to add that seventy-five million rounds was a mere bagatelle and that three hundred million rounds was an average order, it became plain that the Purchasing Committee had a good thing and that the unearned increment would put them in the millionaire class long before the war was over, even if they had to split it more than three ways. As Bob Rogers, Frank Cochrane, Dr. Reid and A. E. Kemp, their ears twitched at the amazing revelations by their material colleagues. They realized that their little purchasing committee was only a side show and that the Big Tent was in New York with Major-General Sam on the ticket wagon. Their pain and their surprise was such that it almost led to a breach in the Cabinet.

Quizzed further by Dr. Pugsley the Minister of Militia acknowledged himself godfather of the New York Purchasing Committee. When he went over to England at the beginning of the war, it was not to collect laurels for his Valcartier Camp performance—plenty of laurels can be got at home—but to get certain sanctions from the British War Office, of which the New York Purchasing Committee was one. The committee, so far as the Major-General's statement goes, was appointed on his nomination. The Major-General is like that. You think he is wholly concerned with glory but he is not overlooking the practicalities of life. Like Pooh Bah in the Mikado his brain it teems with endless schemes both good and new for Titipuu.

Even his stenographer is infected and when he traverses the battle terrain, a year before the war, in company with that lady the armored shovel blossoms in her mind and bears fruit in an order for twenty-five thousand of which only six hundred are being used at the front because the British War Office has an unaccountable prejudice against them. However, the shovels have been paid for and that's the main thing.

Being strategically located in the United States the New York Purchasing Committee does not come within the bounds of Sir Charles Davidson's inquiry. No information is available nearer than the British War Office with whom, so the Major General

CULLODEN MOOR.

The Last Battle Fought on the Soil of Great Britain.

The last battle fought on the soil of Great Britain took place in the middle of the eighteenth century.

While George II. of England was engaged in the war of the Austrian succession Charles Edward, who was called the Young Pretender, a grandson of King James II. of England, landed in Scotland and made two attempts to obtain the throne of his ancestors. He was victorious in the battle of Falkirk, but the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II., having been recalled from the continent to take command of the king's forces, the Pretender was entirely defeated at Culloden moor, a plain in Scotland, four miles from Inverness. This was the last battle fought on the island of Great Britain and took place April 16, 1746, and it was also the last attempt on the part of the Stuart family to recover the throne of Great Britain.

Charles Edward Stuart escaped to France after he had wandered for five months in the highlands, pursued by his enemies. He died in Rome Jan. 30, 1788. The Duke of Cumberland gave no quarter. The wounded were all slain, and the jails of England were filled with prisoners, many of whom were executed. Among the latter number were Lords Balmerino, Kilmarnock and Lovat—Lovat being the last person who was beheaded in England.—Philadelphia Press.

CHINA'S HEAD WORSHIPS.

Kneels Before Altar of Heaven—Ancient Manchu Rite.

President Yuan Shih Kai appeared before the altar of heaven in Peking and revived the worship of heaven at the winter solstice, an observance neglected since the passing of the Manchu dynasty in 1911. In this the President of the Republic took upon himself a function and rite which in the past always has been reserved to the Emperor of China in his capacity of Tien Tsz, or Son of Heaven.

The President worshipped at the famous circular altar, the most important of all Chinese religious structures. It is located in a sacred park three miles from the palace of the emperors and is surrounded by sacred buildings. This altar formerly was regarded in China as the centre of the universe.

Yuan Shih Kai submitted a bill to the Chinese administrative council last January prescribing the worship of heaven and of Confucius for the President of China, and the measure was passed by the council. This act was regarded as tantamount to establishing a state religion for China. During the deliberations of the council it was set forth that the President of the republic should worship at the Temple of Confucius and at the temple of heaven annually, as had been the custom of the Chinese Emperor. The worshiping of the President before the altar of heaven appears to be a carrying out of the purposes then set forth. The President was instructed on these religious occasions to wear the robes of the high dukes designed during the Chow dynasty in the year 1122 B.C. It was then taken for granted that all the old time rites would henceforth be re-established with Confucianism as the state religion, swinging back the pendulum to where it was before 1911.

Asked Too Late.

With the last drop of gasoline gone, Umson found his machine stalled by the roadside, fully six miles from Struthers, at three o'clock in the morning. He was overjoyed when he saw, approaching through the darkness, the glimmer of a lighted lantern. A law rumble soon gave evidence that the light was attached to a vehicle of some kind, and soon a wagon drawn by two stout horses hove into sight.

"There's a five spot in it for you if you tow me into town," hailed Umson.

The driver readily consented.

For an hour or more they rode in the approaching dawn.

Just before they reached the village Umson called to the man on the wagon seat:

"Pretty early to be on the road, isn't it?"

"Yes," the driver returned, "but I have to be out early to get all over my route."

While he was handing out the $5 Umson inquired:

"What is your business?"

And he nearly dropped in his tracks when the man replied:

"I peddle gasoline in the village."

ARCHIMEDES AND HIS LEV

The Feat of Raising the Earth From Scientific Viewpoint.

"Give me a fulcrum and a place which to stand and I will raise earth from its place!" That is a saying popularly attributed to Archimedes. If the required conditions were possible the feat might be performed. In addition to providing a fulcrum a place on which to stand Archimedes would also have to be furnished a definite lease of life.

To raise the earth a height of an inch by the force which Archimedes would have been capable of exerting would take not only an extremely lever, but an extremely long time can be readily shown.

We shall assume the following in our calculation: That the earth is a sphere 7,926 miles in diameter that 5.5 is its mean density; also the lever has no weight. Should design a real lever it would be of enormous size and weight that Archimedes' weight would be a negligible quantity.

If the earth is 7,926 miles in diameter the volume is about 261,000,000 cubic miles, or 38,400,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, and if the density is 5.5 the weight per cubic foot would be about 344 pounds, which multiplied by the volume would give as weight of the earth 13,209,600,000,000,000,000 pounds. We shall assume, further, that Archimedes weighed 150 pounds and that "the place which to stand" was some distant star; then, if the fulcrum is one from the point of application of lever to the earth the length of power arm of the lever, or the distance of Archimedes' "standing place" would have to be 88,004,000,000,000,000 miles.

To move the earth a distance of an inch Archimedes' end of the lever would have to move through a distance of 1,388,000,000,000,000,000 miles. Now, if Archimedes should take of the end of the lever and apply weight of 150 pounds to it and should move off into space with the velocity of light, or 186,000 miles a second, would take him 237,000 years to finish the job he proposed, so that nearly 2,200 years after making famous dictum, he would barely have started the undertaking.—C. O. Strom in Scientific American.

Unnecessary Alarm.

When Frederick the Great, at the beginning of the Seven Years' war, in possession of Dresden he went to view the works of art in the picture gallery. The gallery director Reidel, took the king through all rooms and explained each picture they went along. Frederick expressed his unreserved admiration for all pictures, but when he came before a certain painting by Correggio he stopped, viewing it with particular interest. "If you are willing," he said suddenly, "I should like to have that picture copied."

Reidel gasped, for he expected the king to say that he wished the picture for himself. But the king noticed anxiety and, striking him on the shoulder, said, laughing:

"If you are willing I should like to have that picture copied."—Your Companion.

ANIMAL TOILETS.

Cleanliness Rules and Some Creatures Wash Each Other.

Most animals love cleanliness. We have all seen sparrows fill their feathers with dust and then shake themselves until they are clean. This is one of their ways of washing. And we have all watched the cat lick herself till she is spotless and shining. For her toilet the cat makes use of her tongue, tail and her paws. A cat's tongue is rough, having all over it tiny horny papillae that are directed inward. Pussy brushes herself all over with her tongue, using the hard rough pads under her paws upon those parts that are beyond the reach of her tongue. Her claws she uses as a comb to take tangles and matted foreign substances out of her fur. She also picks her teeth with her claws.

The cat uses the pads of her feet like a sponge, moistening them with saliva and passing them repeatedly over her head and face. Finally, to complete her toilet, she gives herself a few whisks with her tail.

Some animals wash each other. Condors, vultures and eagles after a feast of carrion fly to the nearest water and splash about in it until their feathers are clean. The care that animals which live together in communities take to keep their homes clean is astonishing and is well seen in the nests of moles and especially among the bees and ants.—New York World.

The Socratic Method.

The professor of natural philosophy in Trinity College gave the class a problem to think over during the night and answer the next day. The question was this:

"If a hole were bored through the centre of the earth from side to side and a ball dropped into it would it come to a state of rest?"

Next morning a student was called up on this philosophical problem.

"What answer do you give this question?" asked the professor.

"Well, really," said he, "I have not thought of the main question, but of a preliminary one. How are you going to get that hole through?"

Family Connections.

A Persian merchant, complaining bitterly of some unjust sentence, was told by the judge to go to the cadi.

"But the cadi is your uncle," protested the plaintiff.

"To the sultan, then."

"But his favorite sultana is your niece," warned the injured one.

"Well, then, go to the devil!" said the annoyed judge.

"Ah, that is a still closer connection," said the merchant, and he left the court in despair.

Her Limitations.

"These pianos look too cheap," said the young woman, her brows contracting slightly. "Show me some of the best you've got."

"Yes, ma'am," said the salesman. "May I ask how high you care to go?"

"Me? Oh, I only go to G, but I want one with all the octaves just the same."

A Musical Tyrant.

Gluck as a conductor is said to be an unmerciful tyrant. Frequently the musicians would have to pass a passage twenty times before he satisfied. The members of the VI court orchestra complained of this usage to the emperor, Joseph II., who appeased them by agreeing to them 2 ducats instead of 1 ducat every performance at which he should conduct.

A Prophetic Writer.

In practical science the most obviously prophetic writer was the quils of Worcester, who in his "Tury of Inventions," published in described the steam engine, the graph, the torpedo, the range of the hydraulic press, portable mill pontoons, matches and many things which have come into use in the last hundred years.—St. J Gazette.

Chocolate.

Although the "drink called chocolate" did not appear in England 1657, its restorative properties soon came generally known. Thus on 24, 1661, after an evening of eating, Pepys "worked in the morning with my head in a sad taking the last night's drink, which I am sorry for; so rose and went out. Mr. Creed to drink our morning which he did give me in chocolate settle my stomach."

ARCHIMEDES AND HIS LEVER.

A Feast of Raising the Earth From a Scientific Viewpoint.

"Give me a fulcrum and a place on which to stand and I will raise the earth from its place." That is a saying, popularly attributed to Archimedes, the required conditions were possible; the feat might be performed, but in addition to providing a fulcrum and place on which to stand Archimedes would also have to be furnished an infinite lease of life.

To raise the earth a height of one inch by the force which Archimedes could have been capable of exerting would take not only an extremely long time, but an extremely long time, as it can be readily shown.

We shall assume the following data for our calculation: That the earth is a sphere 7,926 miles in diameter and its density is 5.5; also that the lever has no weight. Should we design a real lever it would be of such enormous size and weight that Archimedes' weight would be a negligible quantity.

If the earth is 7,926 miles in diameter the volume is about 201,000,000,000 cubic miles, or 38,400,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, and if the density is 5.5 the weight per cubic foot would be about 344 pounds, which multiplied the volume would give as the weight of the earth 13,209,600,000,000,000,000 pounds. We shall assume, further, that Archimedes weighs 150 pounds and that "the place on which to stand" was some distant point; then, if the fulcrum is one mile from the point of application of the effort to the earth the length of the effort arm of the lever, or the distance of Archimedes' "standing place," would have to be 88,004,000,000,000,000,000 miles.

To move the earth a distance of one inch Archimedes' end of the lever would have to move through a distance of 1,388,000,000,000,000,000 miles. If Archimedes should take hold of the end of the lever and apply his weight of 150 pounds to it and should move off into space with the velocity of light, or 183,000 miles a second, it would take him 237,000 years to finish the job he proposed, so that now, after 2,200 years after making the famous dictum, he would barely have completed the undertaking.—C. O. Sandm in Scientific American.

Unnecessary Alarm.

When Frederick the Great, at the beginning of the Seven Years' war, was in possession of Dresden he went to view the works of art in the royal gallery. The gallery director, however, took the king through all the pictures and explained each picture as he went along. Frederick expressed his unreserved admiration for all the pictures, but when he came before a picture painted by Correggio he stopped viewing it with particular interest. "You are willing," he said suddenly, "I should like to have that picture."

The king gasped, for he expected the king to say that he wished the picture himself. But the king noticed his anxiety and, striking him on the shoulder, said, laughing: "You are willing I should like to have that picture copied?" — Youth's Companion.

Women's Patriotic Service and Red Cross Work

Through the Daughters of the Empire.

The Committee is much indebted to Mrs. George Shorey for her donation of 18 hospital pillows, and also for making up for us the 3 doz. pillow cases, necessary for the above pillows. We are likewise indebted to Mrs. McKim for her donation of 5 hospital pillows and eleven cases for the same.

We had a splendid work-meeting this week, the results being most encouraging, both as to monetary returns, and a very generous donation from one of our well-wishers.

The necessity for our doing all the work we possibly can, is so apparent from the reports that reach us from abroad, that our room will remain open as-to-for all summer, and our work-meetings will continue as long as our workers show so much interest and enthusiasm.

W. C. T. U. ITEMS.

It is estimated by good authority, that it cost Canada $50,000 to equip, send and bring back the drunks, the refuse of Salisbury Plains, and that the drink bill of Canada could pay and maintain 100,000 soldiers to the end of the war.

A woman, made poor by whiskey, and desperate by the needs of her child, went to her husband's favourite whiskey dealer, put the baby on the bar before the whiskey man and said, "You have the money that should have gone to this baby; now take it and take care of it."

Needless to say, she was back very shortly, to get her baby, and go on with her struggle. Luckily for the world, while men may invest in whiskey the money that should go to the babies, the mothers stick and endure to the last.

In her pitiful despair and rage against whiskey, this unfortunate mother preached an excellent lesson to the public and to the lawmakers.

Whiskey is the enemy of the home. It deprives children of their rights, it deprives them of their food and clothing. It is the curse of mothers, and combined with gambling, the chief cause of poverty and misery in the country.

The making and selling of whiskey should be classed with the keeping of public gambling houses.

It is a grim joke, the fact that the woman who put her child on the bar of the whiskey dealer who had ruined his father, is deprived of the right to vote on the existence of the whiskey traffic, and the man who sold the whiskey, and the father who was ruined by it, and made to neglect his family, both are allowed to vote. TO KEEP THE TRAFFIC GOING.

Votes for women are coming, and whiskey is going.

LAWS OF THE INCAS.

A Code That Was Remarkable For Its Beneficent Simplicity.

Among the most remarkable laws of the Incas were those concerning taxation. The principal feature of those laws was that taxes were not paid in money, but in work and in produce, whether manufactured or grown. The Inca emperors thought it unjust to demand that taxes should be paid in any kind of commodity that the people could not produce by their own personal labor.

The people also paid another sort of tribute. They made clothes, shoes and arms for the soldiers and for the poor who could not work themselves owing to age or infirmity. The cloth was made of wool from the flocks of llamas that abounded in the mountains. On the plains of the seacoast, where the climate is warm and they do not dress in woollens, the people made cotton cloths, the cotton being supplied from the crops of the emperor. The shoes were made in the provinces where aloes were most abundant, for they were made of the leaves of a tree called maguay. Each province furnished its own produce, and no province had to supply anything that did not be-

Bore and Caliber.

The bore of a shotgun is determined by the circumference of any one of a number of lead balls of equal weight, the total weight of which is one pound. For instance, the circumference of the barrel of a ten bore shotgun is equal to the circumference of any one of ten lead balls of equal weight, the total weight of which is one pound.

The caliber of a rifle is the diameter of its barrel measured in hundredths of an inch. The diameter of the bore of a .32 caliber rifle is thirty-two hundredths of an inch.—Philadelphia Press.

A Musical Tyrant.

Gluck as a conductor is said to have been an unmerciful tyrant. Frequently the musicians would have to repeat a passage twenty times before he was satisfied. The members of the Vienna orchestra complained of this harshness to the emperor, Joseph II., who rebuked them by agreeing to give them 2 ducats instead of 1 ducat for every performance at which Gluck would conduct.

PERSISTENT BEAVERS.

A Battle of Wits Between the Animals and the Engineers.

When the Grand Trunk railway ran its line across a swamp in a game preserve on the line of the Alberta Rockies there was a wonderfully constructed beaver dam holding the water back to flood the swamp.

This in the eyes of the game warden was pure waste, and he ordered the engineers to prevent it without harming the beavers. Of course the dam could have been blown up with dynamite, but that would have meant the death of most of the little animals and death very likely in great pain at that.

So the engineers cut an opening in the dam. The mud had become almost as hard as concrete, and it took the men three days to get the water running out steadily. Then, thinking their troubles with the industrious little fellows over, they started work on the railway through the swamp.

Soon the water began to rise, and the work was stopped in a few hours. The engineers made all haste to the dam and found the animals had repaired the cut and made it tight again.

A fresh cut was made, but after the men had gone the beavers busied themselves and made it stronger than ever. Work was again stopped on the railroad within a few hours.

Then a deep hole was made in the earth far under the dam. The beavers were much puzzled. Never before had they seen water go down into the ground and come up far away. But they lent their whole attention to the problem, and the work on the railroad was again stopped as a consequence and the foundations soaked with water.

Then followed an engagement of wits between the beavers and the engineers. But every time the men found a way to cut the dam in a new place the beavers found a way to stop it.

The road was finally constructed by working a few hours at a time, and the loss to the contractors amounted to more than $5,000.—Detroit Free Press.

No Accent.

Many stories are told of a former Canadian bishop who had passed his youth in Scotland, but flattered himself that not a hint of his origin could be gained from his speech or manner.

One day he met a Scotchman to whom he said at last abruptly, "How lang hae ye been here?"

"About sax years," was the reply.

"Hoot, mon!" said the bishop sharply. "Why hae ye na lost yer accent, like myself?"

Each province furnished its own produce, and no province had to supply anything that did not belong to it.

There was a mandate that forbade beggary and destitution; that, of course, followed upon due provision of their laws. Every citizen was provided for theoretically and practically. No man need be idle; no man need lack land or seed or implements for cultivation; therefore no one was permitted to beg. If any were found doing so it was clear proof of idleness, for the incapable were provided for, and contempt and punishment were meted out on all tramps, vagabonds and idlers.—"The Secret of the Pacific."

"For the Sake of Argument."

"Well, now, for the sake of argument"—Is there a more irritating phrase? Is there any greater bore than the person who habitually employs it? To be asked to assume anything "just for the sake of argument" invariably prejudices us against making that concession. We sit grim lippled while the controversialist assumes and expounds. We feel that to oblige him we would not even assume that two and two make four.—Youth's Companion.

Ignorance of the Bible.

One thing is undeniable—knowledge of the Bible is far less general now than it was in the days of my childhood. That amazing familiarity with the sacred book with which John Richard Green credits the people of England in the days of the commonwealth had persisted until my boyhood among the sons of the Puritans and the Scotch Irish in New England and in New York state. It was not universal, but it was general. The kind of tests by which college students and students in secondary schools are frequently in these days made to display an ignorance of the Bible which is astounding could have been passed with credit by the majority of country boys and girls sixty or seventy years ago. But this thorough acquaintance of earlier generations with the Bible was not due to any considerable extent to the public school. All that we learned about the Bible in school would have added very little to our store of religious knowledge. It was in our churches and our Sunday schools, but chiefly in our homes, that most of us learned what we knew about the Bible.—Washington Gladden in Atlantic.

"Literary Style."

A high school student writes this office inquiring what constitutes a "literary style." Without trying to answer this interesting and difficult question, two remarks may be cited that throw light on it.

When Charles James Fox was told that his speech read well he retorted, "Then it was a bad speech." "When one of my congregation would tell me at the end of a service that the sermon was fine," Dr. Lyman Abbott has said, "I knew I had made a failure."

In general the style is good when it fits the thought so well that the style itself does not attract attention. As soon as you begin to be conscious of the style—unless of course you are reading with that end in view—you may be pretty sure it's bad style. Style is something like clothes or furniture. The well dressed man is the man whose clothes do not attract attention. The well furnished room is the one you go out of satisfied, but unable to describe the furniture.—Kansas City Star.

GEORGE GORDON MOORE, DETROIT
GIVES REMARKABLE INTERVIEW ON RETURN FROM BRITISH
HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE—CANADIANS' WORLD'S GREATEST FIGHTERS

DETROIT, June 26.—George Gordon Moore, the Detroit traction magnate and millionaire, who has suddenly acquired prominence because he is the intimate friend of General Sir John French and was interviewed in Detroit direct from British headquarters in France and was interviewed in Detroit on Sunday. As his intimacy with the British commander-in-chief is a matter of common knowledge, his statements are regarded as significant. Mr. Moore says the Canadians are the world's greatest fighters. He describes German civilization as a veneer, which covers the basest and most brutal passions, and says the war will end as soon as the production of war munitions by the allies gives them superiority over the Germans, which may be a year.

George Gordon Moore is a Canadian by birth, having been born in Lambton County and prior to the war lived with Sir John French in a large house at Lancaster Gate, overlooking Kensington Gardens in London. He became a member of the American bar at the age of 21, and since then his activities as a promotor have amassed a vast fortune for him. He is a principal owner of public utilities in Michigan, Georgia, Nebraska, western Canada and Brazil. Sir John French himself is said to figure as a director of several of his companies.

On arriving in New York last Friday, Mr. Moore divulged but little of what he told reporters in Detroit yesterday. He said:

"Young Canadian officers have been crucified by the Germans. They have been nailed to village crosses. The cruelties the German army has practiced since the outbreak of the war would make any of our Indian wars of bygone days look like a condition of Utopian peace.

"Gen. French and I were alone having dinner when word was brought of the first use of gas by the Germans at the battle of Ypres. Our people ought to see the victims. Burning at the stake is human in comparison. It shows what this country would have to face if there were war. It is a signal to get ready.

VALOR OF CANADIANS.

"The valor of the Canadian troops has won for them a place in the history of Great Britain. They are among the world's greatest fighters. When gas was used by the Germans, the allies front line wavered and fell. The southern troops, beating a hasty retreat and leaving the Canadians all but surrounded. They fought for hours and fought so courageously until reinforcements came that they saved the day.

"There is no finer soldier in the world than the Canadian; no gamier, ore resourceful man, and the Germans have a wholesome respect for him on the field, but have practised atrocities which rival and in some instances are of the same type as prevailed in the days of Christ.

Short and Sharp Justice.

It was short and sharp justice that was meted out to the communists in the Paris of the seventies. Sir William Butler in "An Autobiography" tells of a visit to the prison of La Roquette: "We were shown into a small courtyard by a young naval lieutenant, who coolly explained to us the processes of the trial and execution of the communists. 'We strip their right shoulders,' he said. 'If the skin of the neck and shoulders shows the dark mark produced by the kick of the chassépot rifle the court pronounces the single word "classe." If there is no mark of discoloration on the shoulder the president says "passe" and the man is released. Those to whom "classe" is said are shot. One hundred and fifty were shot at daybreak this morning in this courtyard.'"

Folks' Good Opinion.

Few persons do not value the good opinion of others. Pulling down the character of some one else is not the way to build up your own; the ruin of another does not mean your building up. There are some who appear to think another's possessions something taken from themselves. This is a mistake. To point out an error in another's character it is not to prove a corresponding virtue in one's own. Let your chief aim be to make yourself worthy of the good opinion of others. Belittling them is a plain acknowledgment of a conscious fault of your own. The way to win the good opinion of others is to be worthy of it. If you are you will not need to call attention to it.—Milwaukee Journal.

Racket or Raquette.

When you use the racket in playing tennis you do not stop to think what it means and how difficult it has been to trace the word. Some thought that it was so called because of the noise made by the ball striking it, but this is impossible. The real origin is from the French raquette, the palm of the hand, which was originally used in the game before the racket was invented. It's all very simple when you know.—Exchange.

retreat and leaving the Canadians all but surrounded. They fought for hours and fought so courageously until reinforcements came that they saved the day.

"There is no finer soldier in the world than the Canadian; no gamier, ore resourceful man, and the Germans have a wholesome respect for him on the field, but have practised atrocities which rival and in some instances are of the same type as prevailed in the days of Christ.

"Civilization—German civilization—basest and most brutal passions why it is a veneer which covers the imaginable. I saw a Belgian child seven years old, both of whose hands had been cut off by the German soldiers. Their artillery even has dropped shells on refugees, on old men and women and children who were fleeing from towns on which the guns were first directed.

WELLS ARE POISONED.

"And I want to say that evidence has been found of wells being poisoned by the German soldiery or its following. I cite these to show what sort of people England, France and Russia have to meet.

"Here in the United States we read the news and sit in perfect contentment and unpreparedness. We have no fear of war. We think it should not be; but that is entirely wrong. Germany cannot win this war, but if it could the United States would be next, and then what would happen? Ninety per cent. of our munitions of war are made within 150 miles of New York and the landing of an and the seizing of these plants would be a simple matter, when our defenders number but about 800,000 and are not trained in warfare such as that.

"Where would we be then? Our millions would not count if they could not be armed. We would be reduced to the condition of China.

"There is no precedent for modern warfare. Never before have the practices been what they are on the battle fronts, never have armies fought as these are fighting. The entire process is new. In America we have no conception of what it is."

MAY END IN A YEAR.

"How long do you think the war will last?"

"It will end as soon as the production of munitions by the allies gives them superiority over the Germans, and that may be a year," said Mr. Moore. "I look for a speedy victory when this condition is reached, and factories now are running day and night and creeping nearer to it. The allied troops have the men, they have the morale, the money, and ten months of education. When they have the munitions the end will be in sight.

"Lloyd George, as minister of munitions, has brought about a greatly improved condition of affairs. He understands, and munitions are beginning to pour into England and from its own factories. It is a war of artillery, and the English and French have shown themselves masters wherever they had the ammunition. The big guns of the British have checked the powerful artillery of the Germans, and the French, with their seventy-fives, are mowing the fields for the infantry.

"These seventy-fives are marvels. They fire a shell weighing about fifteen pounds at the rate of thirty a minute. A battery will centre on a section, and nothing there can live. It fairly ploughs the fields and levels all obstructions, and when the way is clear the infantry fills in the gap. It is gradual and irresistible, and the French troops are fighting with rare courage and skill, even in the face of the most savage warfare the world has ever known.

FRENCH CABLES "ALL WELL."

"I had a cable from General French yesterday that all is well. When the war is over it will be known that he is the greatest general in history. earth, and the French veterans, who are as capable as the Germans, ready to show them the error of their ways."

SEES NO WORLD PEACE.

"And when the war is over will there be world peace?"

"How could the men forget? No, there never will be world peace. Those who hug the delusion of peace do not understand the basis of Government."

"By the way, it is not any further across the Atlantic now than it was across the Channel when Napoleon planned his invasion of England. It would be well for some peace advocates here to think of that, also to reflect that this country could be led by a nation like Germany."

Mr. Moore would not discuss the rumors which the cables have brought relative to his participation in the recent cabinet upheaval in England. There are many things, he says, which will come out after the war. His presence at the front practically since last October was thru the friendship which exists between Gen. French and himself.

THE WHY OF WORRY.

Those Who Live Only In the Present Have No Fear of the Future.

We worry because we are afraid of something. Worry is fear of the consequences of something that has occurred or something that may happen. A curious thing about it is that it is never associated with the immediate present. It is generally in the future though sometimes in the past.

Animals and babies who are conscious of nothing but the present can not worry. As all creatures, except human beings, live only for the moment, they do not worry because they have no recollection of what has happened and can form no conception of what may happen.

Human beings having the capacity to look back or forward, mentally, are susceptible to the fear that causes worry, and, as most persons live more in the past or future than in the present, this tendency affects for worry or not, according to our viewpoint of life in other respects. Worry is mental fear of an impending something.

Persons afflicted will be less worried about their condition than relatives or friends who sympathize with them. A person may worry in anticipation of a sickness or operation, but when they have the sickness or the operation is performed, the worry disappears, and though they may fear, they cannot worry in the present.—Boston Herald.

BULGARIA GETS READY TO ALIGN WITH ENTENTE

MILAN, June 28.—Feverish excitement prevails in political circles at Sofia. The Premier has had numerous long conferences with King Ferdinand. Extensive military preparations are being made and the Macedonian committees are showing great activity. Negotiations between Bulgaria and Turkey regarding the Dedeagatch Railway have taken a bad turn, the Turks declaring that the Bulgarian minister at Constantinople has gone to Sofia to confer with his government and many believe that he will not return to his post. The British minister has had daily long conferences with King Ferdinand, the premier and other ministers. In the political circles of Bulgaria great importance is attached to the arrival at Rome of the new Bulgarian Minister Stancioff who is known to favor an alliance with the entente powers.

REVOLT IN ROUMANIA?

The pro-German party in Roumania is greatly perturbed at these signs that Bulgaria is going to join the allies. The leading pro-German, former Prime Minister Majorescu, has been sent off hot haste from Bucharest to Vienna and Berlin to discuss the situation. Before leaving Bucharest he had a long audience with the King. If Roumania should enter into engagements with German and Austria, civil war in the present temper of the opposing parties is not impossible. The great mass of public opinion in the Balkans favors war against Turkey and Austria only. The royal influence in each country is supported by a few, but powerful influences so far prevent intervention.

LONDON'S SLUM BABIES.

Gutter Children That Thrive Where They Court Death.

London gutter babies are immune to ordinary diseases and thrive under conditions that would be death to other children, said Dr. Thomas, health officer of the Finsbury district. Dr. Thomas works in the most congested of the London boroughs, where 6,000 families live and sleep in 6,000 rooms.

"Some of these babies," he says, "as soon or even before they are able to crawl, are placed on the sidewalks early in the day, to be watched or nursed by a girl of four or five years. They are true gutter children. Sometimes the immature nurse falls asleep, wearied by her task, and the baby crawls to the other side of the road, heedless of traffic. Both are filthy and gutter stained, but they seem to live. In fact, the stock from which they have sprung rises superior to the ordinary diseases of childhood." Among the cases reported are these:

A baby four months old was given a piece of raw fat and bacon to chew, because the grandmother said bacon was good for babies and canaries.

One baby was dosed with stout and anised by the mother as a cure for colic.

Another baby of nine weeks was fed chiefly on weak tea.

Dr. Thomas complains of the Salford Gamps, who act as nurses in the district, undoing the work of the doctors in many cases. He says their arrogance is equalled only by their ignorance.—New York Tribune.

THE HOUSE OF THREES.

Curious Architecture of England's Most Peculiar Building.

The most peculiar house in the United Kingdom is probably the triangular one at Rushton, in Northamptonshire. Its design is supposed to typify the trinity.

This singular building has three stories, and each story has three windows on each of the three sides, while each of the windows in two of the three stories is in the shape of a trefoil—the three leaved shamrock. In each of the other windows there are twelve panes, arranged in three fours, and the panes throughout are triangular.

Three gables rise on each side and from the center, where their roofs meet, a three sided chimney surmounted by a triangular pyramid terminates in a large trefoil. The smoke issues from three round holes on each of the three sides of the chimney.

Three Latin inscriptions, one on each side of the house, have each thirty letters, while over the door there is another Latin inscription of three words, the English of which is, "There are three that bear record," and on each side are the carved figures of three angels bearing shields.

Inside the house each floor contains three three-sided apartments. The length of each of the walls by outside measurement is thirty-three feet four inches—that is, exactly thirty-three and one-third feet.—London Telegraph.

It is only a quarter of a mile long and built of scrap iron on wooden rails. Its rolling stock consists of two battered freight cars, which are pushed along the road by the men who ship the freight, no locomotives being used.

The freight that is handled on this road consists principally of furs, which are towed up the Athabaska river on scows hauled by men, are laden on the cars, pushed down the railroad and shipped again on other scows, thereby circumventing the dangerous Grand rapids. Returning, the scows carry all sorts of freight for the Hudson Bay company's factors and are floated down the river.

The Hudson Bay company charges $250 a ton for all freight on this little railroad, and the shipper must handle his own goods and push the cars himself.

Where East Seems West.

Those who have crossed the line into the southern regions of our globe are aware that in Chile the sun seems to rise in the west and set in the east. In spite of knowing the contrary to be the fact, it is well nigh impossible to shake off the strange illusion. And this because our senses conspire to tell us the reverse. As in north temperate latitudes the sun never attains the zenith in its Phoebus driven course, we instinctively face the sunward half of the sky when we look south and below the equator, and we are abetted in our deception by the cold winds which blow, as at home, from the opposite quarter. To all our senses north is south and south north. The sun, rising on our right to set upon our left, seems therefore to travel daily backward from west to east in a thoroughly upsetting way.—Pervical Lowell in Youth's Companion.

Bermuda Fish.

There are 233 species of Bermuda fish, but of course all are not edible and many are too insignificant in size to excite the angler. But there are quite enough large ones to make exciting sport for the most fastidious fisherman. For fishing in shallow water the native uses a dinghy, but when he goes to the reef he travels in a whaleboat or motorboat. In almost every Bermuda bay one finds ponds that are stocked with fishes that are being fattened for the market like Thanksgiving turkeys.—Exchange.

When a human soul draws its first furrows straight the rest will surely follow. Henceforth your existence becomes ceaseless activity. The universe belongs to him who wills, who knows, who prays, but he must will, he must know, he must pray. In a word, he must possess force, wisdom and faith. Be conquerors on the earth. Your convictions will be changed to certainties.—Honore de Balzac.

From officers and men I received nothing but tales of disgust at the food in the camps. Last month things improved somewhat, but even so, the men were being kept alive merely by food sent by relatives at home. One officer said: "things are getting better; but in many cases food was rotten, and in others perfectly damnable. There is a great lack of food. Most of the men are actually living on parcels from home. Those who do not get parcels are dying either starvation or diseases brought on by it." A private of the Royal Irish Rifles said he and others had been in Munsterburg Hospital eight months. They were given what they nicknamed Landsturm soup, with chestnuts in it. They were so hard they could hardly bite them. Another man said: "At Rennbahn men are living on stuff sent from home. Their spirit tho is fine. German bulletins are often torn down and men sing God Save the King."

The largest proportion of medical corps men were taken prisoners after the retreat from Mons. They remained behind to tend the wounded. Several told me with indignation how they were dragged away in the midst of dressing wounds of soldier comrades. In some cases doctors were arrested in the very middle of operations.

Quill Pens.

The quill pen is not quite extinct in London. The legal profession, which is very conservative, clings to it tenaciously, and none of the courts would be completely equipped without a plentiful supply of good goose quills. Have you noticed what an indispensable accessory the quill is to counsel, whether in ostentatiously taking a note, making a speech or in helping to point a warning finger at a hostile witness?—London Standard.

The Chair of Torture.

The most prominent building in the ancient city of Nuremberg is the castle. One of its two towers was used for torture; the other served as a prison. The castle also contained a museum of horrors until it was purchased by the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, in whose possession these relics now lie. One of these was the chair of torture. It was very heavily made and studded over the seat and at the elbows with blunt topped spikes. To it the victim was tightly bound, and in a short time discomfort began to manifest itself and in time became unbearable. During its continuance the torture was increased in several ways by means of wedges being passed between the legs and screws being applied to the thumbs until they began to bleed.

DEFIED THE BRAHMANS.

An East Indian Prince Who Did Not Fear Losing Caste.

Mr. Coningsby Dawson, the well known English writer, tells the following anecdote of the East Indian prince Sir Pertab Singh:

A young English lieutenant had died of cholera in his palace. The boy was the son of an English friend. When the body had to be carried out to be placed on a gun carriage Sir Pertab Singh went forward to lift it up. Before he touched it he was stopped by some English officers. They reminded him that, by his religion, were he to touch the dead he would lose all his caste and perhaps, despite his wealth, never be able to buy it back. They advised him to send for the sweepers, who are outcasts. In spite of their protests he picked up the body and carried it down the palace steps to the gun carriage.

A gasp went up at the sight. Every one of his subjects knew what he had done. The next morning, when he rose, 500 Brahman priests were waiting in the courtyard. He came out, a proud figure, to face them. He knew what they had come for—to make him the lowest thing in India, a man without caste. He asked them what was their errand, and they told him. They had come to make him of as little account as the humblest sweeper in his palace.

Sir Pertab Singh laughed. "I belong," he said, "to a higher caste than any of you have ever dreamed of, and you can't take it from me; you're welcome to all the rest. I belong to the same caste as the dead son of my friend—the caste of a soldier."

With that he walked back into his palace, and the Brahman priests went away, one by one, ashamed and puzzled.

Pure Logic.

Liberty commands the highest price of all known things. Its price is so high that nobody can pay it.

Proof. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Eternal vigilance is to be ever on the job. To be ever on the job is to have no leisure or vacation. To have no leisure or vacation is to be a slave. To be a slave is not to have liberty. Therefore in order to be free we must enslave ourselves, which is absurd. Q. E. D.—Judge.

A motor car, beyond all question, and one of uncommon road-devouring quality; it might or might not contain Marrophat and Jimmy, once more in pursuit. Whether or not, bitter experience had long since educated Alan in the gentle art of taking no chances.

Though it was his life that they sought so pertinaciously, no later than yesterday (and then by no means for the first time), they had proved that if Rose were with Alan they would include her ruthlessly in whatsoever scheme they might contemplate for his personal extermination.

Nor would Tom Barcus be exempt, if they were caught in company—though Judith might be, in view of Marrophat's infatuation for the girl.

These two were far ahead, out of sight, indeed; and must somehow be overtaken and warned—no easy matter, since the machine which bore them was, if anything, faster than Alan's, just as the racing automobile was faster than either.

Alan kept his gaze steadfast to the road before them, daring not once to look up and round or back.

So sinuous and meandering was its course, indeed, that Alan seldom could see a hundred yards of it ahead, but must pelt on in panic flight, hoping for the best—that Judith and Barcus would soon show up in front, that something might happen to hinder the pursuit—never knowing whether the latter lost or gained.

And thus catastrophe befell

Round the swelling bosom of a wooded mountainside the motorcycle swept like a hunted hare, and without the least warning came upon Barcus and Judith, dismounted, Barcus bending over his cycle and tinkering with its motor.

For one horriplating instant collision seemed unavoidable. Barcus and Judith and the motorcycle occupied most of the width of the road; there was little room between them and the declivity, less between them and the forest. To try to pass them on the latter side would be only to dash his brains out against the trees; while to make the attempt on the outside would be to risk leaving the road altogether and dashing off into space.

And it was impossible to stop the cycle—so brief was all his warning. In desperation Alan chose the outside of the road; and for the space of a single heartbeat thought that he might possibly make it, but with the next realized that he would not—seeing the front wheel swing off over the lip of the slope.

At this he acted sharply and upon sheer instinct. As the cycle left the road altogether he risked a broken knee by releasing his grasp of the handlebars and straightening out his leg and driving it down forcibly delay. The racing car was barely out of sight when he sprang from the sheltering trees and, Judith at his heels, pelted headlong down the slope to the spot where the others had vanished.

To find them not only alive but practically unscathed affected that loyal soul almost to tears.

But when congratulations had been mutually exchanged, there fell an awkward pause. The eyes of the four sought one another's ruefully, each pair quick with the unuttered but inexorable inquiry: What next?

In the outcome, it was Mr. Barcus who advanced the suggestion which was adopted—though this was its reception more through lack of a better than for any actual appeal intrinsic in the proposition.

"When we broke down, I saw," he ventured, with a backward jerk of his thumb to indicate the road, "a canyon branching off from this one about a quarter of a mile over yonder. If it's all the same to you people, we might stroll round that way and see what its natural attractions may be—if any. But it's sure a mighty poor sort of a canyon that doesn't lead anywhere—and nothing could possibly be more fatiguing to our mercurial and restless tempers than to squat down here and fold our hands in our laps and wait for something to turn up—and anyway we can't be worse off than we are—and—"

"Sufficient!" Mr. Law interrupted with a bleak smile.

Crooking a deferential arm, Barcus offered it to Judith.

"Everything is lovely in the formal garden," he insisted—"so sweetly romantic. Are you game for an idle saunter, just to while the idle hours away?"

The woman found spirit enough for a wan smile as she tucked her hand gratefully beneath his arm.

"You're the cheerfulest soul I ever met," she said demurely. "What I'm going to do without you when—if ever—we get out of this awful business, goodness only knows."

"Let's talk of something else," he suggested hastily.

"Unless, of course," she pursued with unbroken gravity, "I marry you."

"Heaven," the young man prayed fervently, "forfeud!"

"That is hardly gallant—"

"I mean—heaven forfeud that you should throw yourself away!"

"Humph!" she mused. "Perhaps you're right."

Their banter was not without a subtle object, namely, to reassure the girl who followed, supported by her lover's arm.

In the course of the last 24 hours Rose's jealousy of her sister's new-found friendliness with Alan had become acutely evident. The least says the fugitives were making to compass an escape.

For in the shed behind an abandoned log cabin—souvenir, no doubt, of some forgotten prospector—Barcus had unearthed a length of stout hempen rope.

With the aid of a rusty shovel he had hacked this into two equal lengths. One of these lengths he proceeded to make fast around his own waist, then around Rose's. The other he left to be similarly employed by Alan and Judith. For it was agreed that they must climb, and while the cliff offered no problem to daunt a mountain climber of any pretensions, it was considered best that the fugitives should be hitched up in pairs against any possibility of a slip. The pairing had been determined by the fact that Barcus boasted some slight experience in mountaineering, while Rose was plainly the most exhausted of the two women, the least able to help herself in an emergency.

He had worked his cautious way, with the girl in tow, to a point midway up the face of the cliff, following a long diagonal that provided the easiest climbing, when Alan stole back to Judith and reported that, on the evidence of observation and belief, he was convinced that the pursuit had turned back—perhaps for want of ammunition, perhaps to execute some less hazardous attempt upon the lives of the fugitives.

Without delay, then, he made the free end of the rope fast around his own waist, and, following the way Barcus had chosen, began the ascent.

Two-thirds of the climb had been accomplished, and Rose and Barcus had arrived in safety at the top, before the temptation to look down proved irresistible.

Immediately beneath his heels the face of the cliff was deeply hollowed out, leaving a drop of 50 feet to a shelving ledge of shale as steep as a roof, whose eaves—perhaps another fifty feet below—jutted out over another fall of a hundred feet.

Alan shuddered and swallowed hard before resuming the ascent.

Painfully he realized that if, as cus asserted, she had deliberately the rope herself, Judith had off up her life to spare his own.

Retribution.

And yet the very consciousness the girl's danger was all the stant that Alan needed to recall his himself.

Once arrived with Barcus at the of the cliff, he lost no time in set about preparations to effect her cue.

cooperation Alan chose the outside of the road; and for the space of a single heartbeat thought that he might possibly make it, but with the next realized that he would not—seeing the front wheel swing off over the lip of the slope.

At this he acted sharply and upon sheer instinct. As the cycle left the road altogether he risked a broken knee by releasing his grasp of the handlebars and straightening out his leg and driving it down forcibly against the roadbed. The effect of this was to lift him bodily from the saddle: the machine shot from beneath him like some strange projectile hurled from the bore of a great gun; and Rose crashed against him in the same fraction of a second.

Headlong they plunged as one down the hillside, struck its shelving surface a good twenty feet from the brink of the road, and flying apart tumbled their separate ways down the remainder of the drop and into the friendly shelter of the underbrush.

Something nearly miraculous saved them whole. Beyond a few scratches and bruises and a severe shaking up, they escaped unharmed. And they were picking themselves up and regaining their breath and re-collecting their scattered wits when, with impetus no less terrific than their own had been, the pursuing motor car swung round the bend and hurled itself directly at the two who remained upon the road above.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Sacrifice.

But Tom Barcus hadn't failed to profit by the warning implicit in Alan's accident.

Alan, he told himself shrewdly, would never have run his cycle at so foolhardy a pace without good reason; and under the circumstances good reason was synonymous solely with pursuit.

He was therefore on the alert, quick to see the racing automobile when it came hurtling round the bend, and in the very nick of time grasped Judith's arm and swung her bodily with him back out of harm's way, amid the trees that bordered the inside of the road.

Of necessity his motorcycle suffered. Abandoned in the middle of the road, it was struck by the buffers of the motor car and flung aside as if it had been nothing more ponderable than a truss of straw—landing half-way down the embankment, a hopeless tangle of shattered tubing and twisted wire.

At first blush the circumstance seemed surprising, that the car did not stop. But then Barcus reminded himself that Marrophat and Jimmy could not possibly have witnessed the accident involving Alan and Rose, who, together with the wreck of their machine, remained well-cloaked by the underbrush at the bottom of the canyon. In all probability, then, the assassins had assumed that Alan had hurried on; and since their own first business was concerned exclusively with them, they had done likewise, reasoning that they could return and deal with his unfortunate friend at their convenience after overhauling their quarry, whose life they most coveted.

As for Rose and Alan—heaven alone knew what had happened to them. So Barcus set himself to find out whatever Providence knew without more

"I mean—heaven forbid that you should throw yourself away!" "Humph!" she rused. "Perhaps you're right."

Their panter was not without a subtle object, namely, to reassure the girl who followed, supported by her lover's arm.

Nor, indeed, was Rose altogether destitute of plausible excuse for this feeling. It was undeniable that between Alan and Judith a bond of sympathy had grown out of the trials and hardships they had of late suffered in common. It was undeniable—but even in his most private thoughts Alan denied it fiercely. Judith, on the other hand, not only acknowledged it freely to herself, but secretly derived a strangely sweet and poignant pleasure from the knowledge that she loved so madly and hopelessly.

That her love was hopeless she knew but too well. Even though Alan might not be altogether indifferent to her, after all that had passed between them, his loyalty to Rose was unshakable. And not for worlds would Rose's rival have had it otherwise. She could not have loved him as she did had he not been so unmovably true. As it was, since she could not hope her love might be returned, she was content to love and to promise herself that, if opportunity ever offered, she would not prove unready to sacrifice herself for her love.

And at times she caught herself praying that such opportunity would be accorded her, and quickly, and that the sacrifice it should demand would be complete.

Now prayers are sometimes answered when the boon craved is good for the soul.

Slowly and painfully these four toiled along an obscure trail that followed the windings of the little river, until a branch struck into the main stream and so discovered to them yet another trail leading into the westward canyon.

Then again slowly and painfully they plodded on following blindly another trail blazed by Fates as blind as they.

Above them, on the road they had abandoned, the crimson racer doubled back to the point where it had passed Judith and Barcus; its occupants descended, explored, and came presently upon the trail of the fugitives.

Bloodhounds could not have settled down upon a scent with more good will and eagerness than Mr. Marrophat and his faithful aide.

The sun was high and blazing above the canyon when the pursuit came within rifle shot of the chase.

A spiteful shot roused the quartet from a pause of lethargic dismay due to tardy appreciation of the fact that they had penetrated witlessly almost to the end of a blind alley.

A hasty council of war armed Alan with Judith's revolver and posted him behind a bowlder commanding the approaches to the chasm. The weapon, a powerful .45, had a range sufficient to numb the impetuosity of the assassins and keep them under cover and out of sight of the desperate especially immediately beneath his heels the face of the cliff was deeply hollowed out, leaving a drop of 50 feet to a shelving ledge of shale as steep as a roof, whose eaves—perhaps another fifty feet below—jutted out over another fall of a hundred feet.

Alan shuddered and swallowed hard before resuming the ascent.

Another 20 feet brought him to a ledge quite six feet wide, offering a broad and easy path to the summit. He gained this with a prayer of heartfelt relief and was on the point of rising to his feet when a cry of horror from Barcus and a scream of terror from Rose, watching over the upper edge, warned him barely in time to enable him to snatch at and grasp a knob of rock before Judith's weight tautened the rope between them and jerked Alan's legs from under him.

His feet and legs kicked the empty air beyond the lip of the ledge, he lay face downward, clutching desperately the knob of rock, praying that it might not come away in his grasp, that his grasp might hold, that Barcus might arrive in time to save them both. The rope was cutting into his waist like a dull knife. The drag of Judith's body was frightful. He could feel her swinging like a pendulum at the end of its 30 feet, and could imagine but too vividly what would happen if the rope should prove faulty.

The fall of 20 feet to the shale roof was nothing. What would follow would, however, spell death. The impact of her body would set the shale in motion, like an avalanche—and beyond the eaves was only emptiness and the bowlder-strewn bed of the chasm, a hundred feet below!

The sweat poured from his face like rain. His eyes started in their sock-

Startled by this alarm once more into full command of his flagging fac-into the roadway, taking cognizance of such facilities for defense as the camp afforded and issuing instructions with a voice vibrant with fear, not for his own safety, but for the safety of those whom he loved.

Not far from the point where the road swung from the cliff to thread the camp the hydraulic nozzle was in action, its terrific force of water melting the mountainside away ton by ton.

Toward this Barcus ran at top speed, gaining the man in charge of the nozzle just as the car swung round the bend.

Pausing only long enough to make certain that there could be no mistake—and having this certainty made doubly sure by Jimmy's action in rising from his seat and firing over the windshield pointblank at Alan as this last stood waiting in the roadway—Barcus and the miner swung the nozzle round until it bore directly on the car.

The power of its stream was such that the car was checked instantly in its tracks; and before the water could have been shut off or the stream diverted, the machine was driven back to the very lip of the cliff and over it completely, taking with it those twain upon whose efforts all the hopes of Seneca Trine of late had been centered.

A death that was merciful, in that it was instantaneous, awaited them at the foot of the cliff.

CHAPTER LI.

The New Judith.

From sleep as from drugged stupor Judith Trine awakened, struggling back to consciousness like some exhausted diver from the black depths to the star-smitten surface of a night-bound pool.

And for a little she lay unstirring, her half-numb wits fumbling with their business of renewing acquaintance with the world.

At first she could by no means recognize her surroundings. This rude chamber of rough plank walls and primitive furnishings; this wide, hard couch she shared with her still slumbering sister, Rose; the view revealed by an open window at the bedside;
a fair perspective of tree-clad mountains through which a wide-bosomed canyon rolled down to an emerald plain, conveyed nothing to her intelligence.

A formless sense of some epochal change in the habits and mental processes of a young lifetime, added to her confusion.

Who was she herself, this strange creature who rested here so calmly by the side of Rose? If she were Judith Trine, how came she to be there? Irreconcilable opposites in every phase of character, the sisters had sedulously avoided association with each other ever since childhood:
they had not shared the shelter of four walls overnight since time beyond the bounds of Judith's memory.
What, then, had so changed them both that they should be found in such close company?

What, indeed, had become of the wild thing, Judith Trine of yesterday?
Surely she had little enough to com-

And now the thought stirred her, sharply that what was to be done must be done quickly, if at all.

And the almost level rays of the declining sun, striking in through the open window, counseled haste if Judith were to accomplish her intention of leaving this place and finding her father again before nightfall.

With the utmost care she rose from the bed, crept to the door of the room (now recognized as the quarters of the foreman of the hydraulic mining outfit) and out into the room adjoining.

And there, pulling the door to gently behind her, she paused and for many minutes stood in tensestrung contemplation of the man she loved—Alan Law, asleep in a chair beside a table, his head pillowed on his folded arms.

This was leave-taking between them
—and he would never know.

Far better so: Judith felt she could not trust herself to say farewell to him without breaking down and confessing the utter wretchedness that threatened to overwhelm her each time she forced herself to face the thought that this parting must be final.

Like a thief she stole across the creaking floor to Alan's side, hesitated, bent her head to his and touched her lips to his cheek—a caress so light to Judith's breast—as level and unequivocal as the glance that probed her eyes and the tone of Rose's voice

as she demanded:

"What were you doing there?"

"If you must know from me what you already know on the evidence of your eyes—I was bidding good-by to the man I love—kissing him without his knowledge or consent before leaving him to you for good and all!"

"What do you mean?"

"That I'm going away—that I can't stand this situation any longer. Mar-rhap and Jimmy are dead, my father's helpless—and I mean to see that he remains so. Nothing, then, stands in the way of your marrying Alan but me. And such being the case—and because he's as dear to me as he is to you—I'm going to take myself off and keep out of the way."

"For fear lest he find out that you love him?"

Judith's lip curled. "Do you think him so witless he doesn't know that already?"

"And so you leave him to me out of your charity! Is that it?"

"Any way you like. But if it's so intolerable to you to think that I dare love him and confess it to you—if you begrudge me the humiliation of stooping to kiss a man who doesn't want my kisses—if you are so afraid

this business Fortune smiled upon, as it were, by predisposition. A broad roadway ran along the top of the precipice, turning off at a distance to the right, to descend mountainside. And just beyond turning Providence had chosen to locate the camp of a hydraulic outfit. Alan's appearance at the top, in fact, was coincident with the arrival at that point of half a dozen excited men; and he had no more than satisfied his demands than three of their number were hastening back to the camp to procure rope and more hands. Within five minutes Alan, against the protests of Rose and Barcus, was g lowered over the edge and down the shale roof on which he landed a spot far to one side of Judith, to escape all danger of sending a second landslide down upon her. Making his way carefully down to the level, Alan edged along this, rather than once saved a fall to death by the rope, until he stood immediately below Judith. When pausing, he instructed her fully, tossed the end of the rope into her hands, and when she had wound it twice round her arm, crept to her side and helped her make it about her body. A signal to the miners that all was well elicited prompt response. There was a giddy interval in which the two swung perilously between heaven and earth. Then they stood more in safety. Supported by sympathetic hands, the quartet staggered into camp. The story, as condensed by Barcus, breathlessly confirmed by Alan, and duly winning them enthusiastic applause. And this was very well for them. They had no more than seated Carried into the Hotel.

What, indeed, had become of the wild thing, Judith Trine of yesterday? Surely she had little enough in common with this Judith of today, in whose heart was no more room for envy, hatred, malice or any uncharitableness, so full was it of love which, though it was focused upon the person of one man, none the less embraced all the world—even her sister and successful rival in that one man's affections.

This change had not come upon her without warning. She had been almost insensibly aware of its advent through the gradual softening of that old Judith's hard and vengeful nature in the course of the last few days. But now that the revolution was accomplished, she hardly knew herself—she hardly knew the world, indeed, so differently did she regard it—not without something of the wide-eyed wonderment of a child to find all things so new and strange and beautiful.

And this was the work of Love!

Now the chain of memories was quite complete, no link lacking in its continuity. She recalled clearly every incident that had marked the slow growth of this great love she had for Alan Law, from that first day, not yet a month old, when he had escaped the fiery deathtrap she had set for him and repaid her only by risking his life anew to save her from destruction, down to this very morning when the stream from a hydraulic nozzle had swept over the brink of a three hundred-foot precipice a crimson racing automobile containing two desperate men bent upon compassing the death of her beloved.

By that act of sheer self-defense the world was richer for the loss of two black-hearted blackguards, and Alan Law might now be considered safe from further persecution—since there now remained not one soul loyal enough to Seneca Trine to prosecute his private war of vengeance against Alan. And though that aged monomaniac had means whereby he might purchase other scoundrels and corrupt them to his hideous purposes, Judith was determined that he should never again have any opportunity so to do. Though Alan, she knew, would never lift his hand to hinder her father's freedom of action, she, Judith, meant to take such steps as his persecution called for. If there were any justice in the land—if there were any alienists capable of discriminating between Trine's apparent sanity and his deep-rooted mania—then surely not many days more should pass into history without witnessing his consignment to an institution for the criminal insane.

She, Judith, would see to that, and then . . .

The woman sighed once more.

Then Rose and Alan would marry and live happily ever after.

But what of Judith?

She made a small gesture of resignation to her destiny. What became of her no longer mattered, so that Alan were made happy in such happiness as he coveted.

—and he would never know.

Far better so: Judith felt she could not trust herself to say farewell to him without breaking down and confessing the utter wretchedness that threatened to overwhelm her each time she forced herself to face the thought that this parting must be final.

Like a thief she stole across the creaking floor to Alan's side, hesitated, bent her head to his and touched her lips to his cheek—a caress so light that he slept on in ignorance of it.

Then, as she lifted her head and stood erect, bosom convulsed with silent sobs, she looked squarely into the face of Rose.

CHAPTER LII.

The Old Adam.

A long minute elapsed before either woman moved or spoke.

Transfixed beside Alan's chair, steadying herself with a hand upon its back, Judith stared at the figure in the doorway, in a temper at once discomfited and defiant. With this she suffered a phase of incredulity, was scarce able to persuade herself that this was truly Rose who confronted her—Rose whose sweet and gentle nature had ever served as the butt of Judith's contempt and ruthless ridicule.

Here was revolution with a vengeance, when Rose threatened and Judith shrank!

It was as if the women had exchanged natures while they slept.

The countenance that Rose showed her sister was a thundercloud rent by the lurid lightning of her angry eyes. Her pose was tense and alert, like the pose of an animal set to spring. In her hand hung a revolver, the same (Judith's hand sought the holster at her hip and found it empty) that her sister had worn and forgotten to remove when she dropped, half-dead with fatigue, upon the bed.

And slowly, toward the end of that long, mute minute, the girl's grasp tightened upon the grip of the weapon and its muzzle lifted.

Remarking this, a flash of her one-time temper quickened Judith. Of a sudden, with a start, she crossed the floor in a single, noiseless stride, and threw herself before her sister.

"Well?" she demanded hotly. "What are you waiting for? Nobody's stopping you: why don't you shoot?"

The upward movement of the hand was checked: the weapon hung level

"For fear lest he find out that you love him?"

Judith's lip curled. "Do you think him so witless he doesn't know that already?"

"And so you leave him to me out of your charity! Is that it?"

"Any way you like. But if it's so intolerable to you to think that I dare love him and confess it to you—if you begrudge me the humiliation of stooping to kiss a man who doesn't want my kisses—if you are so afraid of losing him while I live and love him—very well, then!"

With a passionate gesture Judith tore open the bosom of her waist, offering her flesh to the muzzle of the revolver.

A cry broke from the lips of Rose that was like the cry of a forlorn child punished with cruelty that passes its understanding. She fell back against the wall. The revolver swept up through the air—but its mark was her own head rather than Judith's bosom.

But before her finger found strength to pull the trigger the man at the table, startled from his sleep by the sound of angry voices, leaped from his chair with a violence that sent it clattering to the floor, and hurled himself headlong across the room, imprisoning the wrist of his betrothed with one hand while the other wrested the weapon away and passed it to Judith.

"Rose!" he cried thickly, "what does this mean? Are you mad? Judith—"

Dragging the bosom of her waist together, Judith thrust the weapon into its holster and turned away.

"Be kind to her, Alan," she said in an uncertain voice; "She didn't understand and—I goaded her beyond endurance, I'm afraid. Forgive me—but be kind to her always!"

Somehow, blindly, she stumbled out of the cabin into the open, possessed by a thought whose temptation was stronger than her powers of resistance. What Rose had failed to accomplish might now serve to resolve Judith's problem. . . . None, she told herself, bitterly, would seek to hinder her. But she meant so to arrange the matter that none should see or suspect and be moved to interfere.

Round the shoulder of the mountain, on the road along the edge of the cliff, she was sure of freedom from observation.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

Numerous inquiries are made by people who intend to take land and progressive farmers regarding the profitable crops.

Mixed farming is the most profitable system either for small or large producers. This means a variety of crops and other farm interests instead of a crop such as corn, or a single industry such as dairying, poultry keeping or pork production.

I would organize any farm with ten or more sources of income so that the failure of one or more products will not be ruinous. I offer these suggestions: Use a tenth of the land for Crochet hooks as well as knitting knitting for the soldiers in the Euro-now women are never happy without a pair of knitting needles or a crochet hook in their fingers. Many wonder-

Telegrams.

This is a game in which paper and pencil and some wit will be needed by each of the players.

The director of the game asks from a succession of players in turn a letter of the alphabet, chosen at random, and the ten letters are taken down in the order given.

A "from" person—some one well known to all—is next chosen, and then another well known person to whom the telegram is to be addressed. This telegram must consist of ten words, the words to begin with the letters given in the order in which they were taken down.

Each player writes a message, and when all are ready they are read aloud in turn by the writers or by the director.

For example, suppose the letters given were a, c, g, l, f, t, p, s, r, h, one of the telegrams might read "After Christmas geese laying four times per Sunday receive benedictions."

A Geographic Game.

A game which is entertaining as well as instructive is played as follows: There may be any number of players, and it will be enjoyed by people of all ages. Let the beginner give some geographical word—the name of a country, city, river or mountain. The next player continues with a name whose first letter is the last letter of the word given by the preceding player.

Thus, suppose the first word given is Albany, the second must begin with Y, Yucatan, for instance. No. 3 must give a place whose initial letter is N, and so on. When a player fails to have a name ready he is dropped from the game, and the one who can play the longest is, of course, the winner.

ABOUT A MILLINERY SHOP.

Mrs. So-and-so started a millinery store with some money she possessed of her own. She built up a thriving little business and put up a sign over the door of her shop reading, "Mrs. So-and-so's Millinery." Later on her husband entered into the business with her, and they changed that sign to read "So-and-so's Millinery." Then one day Mr. So-and-so died. His family promptly claimed that the business was his. And so the surrogate—that is, the judge having jurisdiction over the probate of wills and the administration of estates—also decided that the business had belonged to her husband and so was his estate. Then very generously he permitted the widow, who had founded the business and built it up, to deduct from the $1,000 in cash which constituted the profits on hand at the time of Mr. So-and-so's death the $100 with which she had started the business! The reason why the husband's family claimed the business as his was that, it being personal property, they could obtain one-half of it and the wife one-half. If, however, the wife had died, leaving any amount of personal property, the husband would have received the entire amount. Her family would not have been considered.

It must be done. Nine forty-five, put out all medicines and see that all empty loctions, etc., are sent up to the dispensary to be renewed; then get all dressings ready, sterilize instruments, help with the dressings, clean up, wash and sterilize instruments and scrub all bowls, carbolic mackintoshes, etc.

"Wander round in file after the doctor and listen to his lightest request and rush off to fill it, but never run. It is taboo, a rapid glide can be acquired. Then you get the diet sheet made up and signed, meal lists made up, bath list sent in, linen list made, and stores made up. Besides these trifles you have to get your patient's lunch and carry it to the wards, gobble your own, then get their knife, fork and spoon, bread and tray for dinner. After this you gobble yours and then rush for the trays and carry them off in triumph to the ward and feed the lions, then rush off for the puddings, then sweep and dust again and put out medicines. I may mention that all brass has to be polished, pans and kettles kept in order and such little abodes of bliss as wash houses, lavatories, etc., all come under your charge in rotation, also the recreation room to be kept tidy and in order.

"After dinner—that is, about 2 till 3—you may get a chance of sitting down, and you make swabs, cut dressings, pad splints, if you are not changing your four hourly dressings, etc. At 3 you go and cut bread and butter for tea, bring mugs, etc., forward. At 3:45 fetch and give them tea, then sweep again. At 5 take temperatures, make beds, wash patients, do backs, and do all dressings. Supper at 7 and bed at 8—you are devoutly thankful it is not later. Our hours are 7:30 a. m. to 9 p. m., and one day we are on from 7:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., and the next day from 7:30 till 2:15, and then from 6 till 9. Of course it is not possible to get your off duty times always, but those are what we are supposed to have.

"We have been awfully busy lately and some of the men were only four days out of the trenches to us. They are awfully wounded, poor chaps, but it is nice having them straight from the front, and they do tell you a wonderful lot of back door history."

Neither European or Asiatic.

What is it that has made Russia the great enigma, the stranger both to Europe and Asia? Beyond doubt, the fact that she is herself neither one. To the Asiatic she is something of a European; to the European she is something of an Asiatic; yet to both she is not wholly either the one or the other. She is like a great tree with her ancient trunk rising up out of the Caucasus, the early home of the Slavic people and towering up into the fens of the north and with her branches extending east and west into the sunrise and the sunset—Century.

ture, four acres for alfalfa, four for root crops, four acres for grain, two acres for poultry range, two acres for dwelling, lawn, barns yards. Have several brood mares furnish farm power and raise a few cows to produce but cream or milk; raise 500 ducks, 1,000 chickens for market; keep a 500 laying hens, or enough to produce twenty dozen eggs per day on an acre; arrange the grainfield, the pasture, the alfalfa field, the plot voted to root crops and the four assigned to garden truck so that would be interchangeable, and thus crops could be grown in rotation. a farm of twenty acres or even less in this proportion could be maintained. Six cows, forty hogs and three mules together with a few head of yearling stock, could easily be provided for under this plan. The income should be about as follows:

Earnings from six cows.....	One team of horses.....
Forty hogs.....	Five hundred ducks.....
One thousand chickens.....	Egg production.....
Four acres fruit.....	Four acres vegetables.....

Allowing for labor $600, mill $300, household expenses $400, into investment $500, upkeep of equipment $300 and incidentals $100, have an outlay of $2,200. This amount subtracted from the gross income $5,500 leaves $3,300 net as compensation for the farmer and his family. Not all farmers can accomplish this, but such results are being attained a great many cases.

Not only must agricultural study education point the way toward successful culture of corn, wheat, ton and rice, but must point the way toward the most profitable selection crops for particular soils, climates markets. As land values increase farmers must acquire the capacity adjusting themselves to these changes, else they will find themselves trying to raise crops that can no longer be produced at a profit.

There is a multitude of interest which every progressive farmer acquire, and these should be developed as early as possible. Good roads, credit, sanitary precaution about home, the use of the latest conveniences and an alert community spirit are among these interests.

Agricultural education in the public schools must make of the boy an imperator for truth. His investigations must proceed with unabated when his school days proper are finished, and his farm must ever continue to be his school.

SUCCESS FROM FERTILIZING.

Vegetable Matter and Nutrient Qualities Found In Stable Product.

The success from fertilizing is due to two facts, the readiness with which the fertilizer gives up its nutrient parts and the ability of the land to hold these nutrient parts and keep them from being washed away before taken up.

Loamy or so called rich soils hold their nutrient part in readiness because there is sufficient vegetable matter to make it light. This gives a chance for the air to aid the germs of fertilization to increase and multiply, to prepare the substances to be taken up by the plants.

Heavy clay soil produces slowly until the vegetable matter increases. Sandy soils unless well supplied with vegetable matter permit the fertilizer to filter away beyond reach of plant roots before the plants get all out of it.

For general purposes stable manures give best results all around. They have the vegetable matter as well as the nutrient qualities. In some kinds, such as cow, sheep manures, etc., the nutrient qualities are more quickly available than in horse manure. Horse ma-nures, as usually procurable, have a tendency to be either all straw, which is more of a mulch than a nutrient, or dry burned out, due to lack of proper

BARNYARD MANURE PILE.

care or mixed with green wood shavings or sawdust, which will sour the ground unless for just surface dressing.

All those who have stables and want to get the best out of their stable ma-nures when they clean their stables every day should make a layer about six inches deep, cover this with about two inches of dirt and continue this until the pile reaches four or five feet high. Have this pile turned over into a new pile every three months. Be sure the water can get to it once or twice a week to prevent heating.

When ready for use none of the valuable ammonia has escaped and the entire mass is unsurpassed by any fertilizer.

Do not follow the idea that when planting trees you should put fertilizer at the bottom of the hole. Plant your tree, and when within about two inches of the top place your fertilizer and cover over with soil. The rain will wash the essence down to the roots.

The same practice can be followed with established trees. Care should be taken that the fertilizer does not touch the bark or roots. Remember, trees take up food with their fibrous roots, and fibrous roots usually are near the ends of big supporting roots, and tree roots usually go as far outward as the branches extend.

This tells where to apply fertilizer.
It does no more harm to feed your trees, etc., once a year than it does to treat yourself right. The old, foolish argument that forest trees are not fertilized will seem more foolish if you give it a second thought.

There is no reason for broadcasting manures in the vegetable garden. It is wasted energy. Apply manure to each hill or row, with dirt between it and the seed. This gives the greatest results for the least expenditure of time and money. No need to feed weeds.

MACHINE GUNS.

These Deadly Weapons Fire Some 700 Bullets a Minute.

The machine gun, which pours forth a direct hail of small caliber bullets, is one of the deadliest weapons of modern warfare.

From the clumsy Gatling gun has come the modern "automatic," mounted on a light tripod, and weighing less than forty pounds. All the armies use these guns, which, although they vary somewhat in type, are essentially alike in their mechanism and in their effectiveness.

In the Benet-Mercie automatic machine gun of the French army a metal feed strip, or clip, that contains thirty ordinary army rifle cartridges is inserted in a slot on the right side of the gun. As the trigger is pulled the bolt mechanism is released and, guided by the main firing spring, pushes a cartridge into the rifle chamber.

The instant the cartridge is in place the breech mechanism locks and the charge is exploded. On its way through the rifle barrel, a little of the gas from the exploded powder is diverted through a hole in the side of the barrel, and so acts on a piston as to force the bolt mechanism back and to compress the main spring.

In returning, the bolt mechanism pulls the empty shell from the chamber and throws it out below, so that it does not interfere with the new cartridge that is now forced in from above.

The mechanism is so perfect that the operation described takes place in a small fraction of a second, and the bullets issue from the mouth of this deadly weapon at the rate of seven hundred a minute.—Youth's Companion.

The report is one of the encouraging in the history of the church. The membership stand 471 being an increase over any previous year. The total givings of the church amount to over $7000.00. Organizations report a prosperous year. The pastor leaves to-day for vacation. Rev. T. C. Brown, of Belleville, will supply the pulpit during pastor's absence, and will take charge of the prayer meeting and look after all the interests of the church. Brown's subjects on Sunday next be: "Our Mission" in the morning and "A plea for honesty" in the evening. Be sure and hear Mr. Brown.

Some Game Last Friday.

The base ball game at the Dri Park last Friday evening between "Has-Been's," and the "Would-Be's" was some game and drew a large crowd of citizens from spectators "rooters." An admission of 25c charged and the proceeds were donated to the Red Cross Society. Amount realized was $111.15. The result of the game was a win for "Would-Be's." "Jimmy" Rose pitched off the batting feature of the eve by smashing out a home run. "W. E." the veteran pitcher, can still pitch a lot of "stuff" on the ball, and as a consequence a lot of the best batter the "Would-Be's" when they faced him "biffed the air," instead of ball. Of course the game put up the juniors was A1 in every respect and the fact that they only won a score of 9-4 plainly shows that "old-fellows" made them step a little the way. We predict that with all the strengthening the "1870 fellows" could come back and take the score of the "1915 bunch." However it was a good game and everybody present had some hearty laughs and enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Grace Church Notes.

On Sunday morning last the service in the Grace Methodist church was special patriotic character. The Sunday school assembled in the auditorium of the church. The dress was given by the pastor, and subject chosen was, "Manhood of God." In the course of his sermon referred to the members of our Sunday school, and church, who volunteered and who were now fighting our battles, defending our liberties and laying down their lives for glory of the Empire. But while boys are thus defending our privilege and freedom at the front, there are duties each one of us ought to perform. Every morning, noon, and night we ought to remember to be before the throne of grace, and by occasional letter we ought to communicate in their great ordeal. He took occasion to refer to the going Dr. Cameron Wilson, a member of Grace church. Dr. Wilson, during the years of his stay in Napanee made a place for himself in thought and life of the town, besides working up a large practice, and going was to be regretted. He was, however, followed by the prayers and best wishes of a great host of friends. Mr. Cragg, however, referred to the fact that at the close of the war Dr. intended to return to Napanee and resume his practice.
